August 2008

August 5, 2008

The new issue of LCR is reviewed by Phil Wagner of Iconoclast. Here's what the good man in the hills has to say about our efforts:

Always provocative, often spiced with surrealism (in the South American manner) and a sly humor (poems and stories). The photos and art are first-rate. The overall quality is high--and best of all (to me): the contributors aren't the usual small press gang of idiots recycling the same tired shit yet again (greed takes many forms). You know what? I don't even think they're non-profit--another plus. Check 'em out.

July 2005

July 2005

LCR's second issue (Fall/Winter 2004-2005) receives an excellent review in Literary Magazine Review. Aaron T. Truby writes: "LCR has fully grafted into this reviewer, enchanting and disturbing provocatively with its heady mix of poetry, prose, and contemporary art (reprinted for the most apropos effect). I could enjoy this collection's contents either contemplatively or recklessly, savoring each line or gobbling up entire paragraphs with rapacity...." Read the full review in Literary Magazine Review, Vol. 23, No. 1 & 2, Spring/Summer.

June 2005

September 7, 2004

LCR #1 receives a rave review in Issue Number 86 of The Iconoclast:

"A fine and substantial debut. The work is intense, focused, vivid, and finely etched. No carefree second (or third) career romps through the poesy garden here. Each poet and writer has something to say, throws down a challenge: Did you miss something? Do you get it? Can you make the world a better place? There's an intriguing short play, 'Friend of Man,' by Lee Rowland that seems a cross between the French existentialists and a Twilight Zone episode. Kalle Ryan finishes the issue with three wry pieces that bring a nod and a wink. Even the poets we all know (say four of the two dozen) are on their best behavior. In addition, there are three stories and some art. If they can maintain this quality, Lilies and Cannonballs (name from a Vicente Huidobro quote) should have a great future. A welcome addition to the independent literary landscape."

—Phil Wagner, The Iconoclast, 1675 Amazon Road, Mohegan Lake, NY 10547-1804
